The serologic diagnosis of brucellosis was made in patients with a variety of clinical signs and symptoms. Complement Fixation (CF) titers greater than or equal to 1:80 and greater than or equal to 1:320 using formalin-fixed brucella organisms and CF titers greater than or equal to 1:80 and greater than or equal to 1:320 using live brucella organisms were found to be equally sensitive and specific in the diagnosis of brucellosis. The CF titer greater than or equal to 1:80 was found to be positive in 1 of 2 sera from 7 of 20 patients with brucellosis, and none of 3 patients with non-brucellosis febrile diseases; the CF titer greater than or equal to 1:320 was found to be positive in 4 of 14 patients with brucellosis and in 3 of 3 patients with non-brucellosis febrile diseases. The CF titers were found to be positive in 1 of 5 patients with other pyogenic fever, 1 of 9 patients with malignant neoplasms, and in 1 of 8 patients with benign neoplasms. The sensitivity of CF tests was similar for 3 sera from 5 patients with brucellosis that were obtained within 4 weeks of a hemolytic reaction, whereas the specificity of the CF tests was similar for 1 serum from the same patient that was obtained 6 weeks after the hemolytic reaction. The CF titers were found to be positive in 4 of 7 patients with
